COST STATISTICS SERVE CONTRACTOR

ganization a grasp of his force and a means of supervision that could no otherwise be obtained, in my opinion. Figures Won't Lie.

"As for the assertion of our New York friend that such figures, if made public, would not give the reader a true grap of the situation, because certain condiof the situation, because certain condi-tions which affected the general result would be omitted, I can only repeat the question asked by a journal on the other side of the controversy: What conditions are there that could not be described. I confess I can't recall to mind at the present time any. If the conditions were of so important a nature that they affect-ed the ultimate cost, they would seem to admit of some description. If they were so striking that the contractor can call them to mind at will after several years, or when they may be useful to him, again they would seem open to adequate or when they may be useful to him ngain they would seem open to adequate description.

"I do not believe with the negative that figures furnished for cost data, articles are either misleading or incomplete. I know our firm has supplied statistics for any number of such articles, and often the books of the company or any affecting the job in question are thrown wide open for inspection. It would seem too mean a practice, to be general, that a contractor should willfully mislead the investigator, either by false statements vestigator, either by false statements r half truths. I think the result of the outroversy will be greater scrivity in the compilation and use of cost data."

"I don't think quarantine at St. Louis. "I don't think he will come to Washington," continued Dr. Woodward. "I'l he does, we'll have to treat him like we've done those of his class who have already visited the city. "If he reads Washington newspapers, he will undoubtedly take my advice, as given to the press, and steer for New York. That's the place for the leper. No laws to hurans him, no health officials to torment him. Up there he can engage in almost any business he chooses—from that of chef to dentist. "But let him come here, and the first thing he knows he will find himself in the little two-story brick quarantine house on the hank of the Eastern Branch, behind the jail. And then, the first chance we got we'd put him in a box car and ship him away. That was the way of Early, and that will be the way of the next leper who seeks Washington as a place of residence."

"FARMER" WILSON FOR GOOD ROADS

Forty-four Millions Spent in Year in South Alone.

The expenditure of nearly $44,000,000 was made during the present year in road improvements in the Southern States alone." said Secretary Wilson yesterday in discussing the work the Agricultural Department is doing for the construction and improvement of roads in the country. The Secretary is billed, for a speech at the Good Roads Congress to be held in Eichmend next week.
"Through its office of public roads," continued the Secretary, "the department has men throughout the country stimu-lating the nation-wide movement for ginia, $4,004,000, and West Virginia, $1,555,000.

"Good roads will particularly prove beneficial to the farmer—of the South, where, spart from the staple crops, the soils will produce almost every known crop, and especially late whiter and early spring varieties, when transportation from farm to railroad is readered difficult, owing to the cut-up and rough condition of unimproved roads."
